THE OLD HERO GONE.

The long looked for event has come at last. General Grant is dead, and a nation mourns. It has been expected, a people has been prepared for weeks to weep at his bier, still the flow of tears knows no bounds. The hero of Appomattox, that stern and brilliant soldier, has gone to join the last dying moment his country was his with his cheek! God. But now his warfare is ended. Twice President of the United States, the honers of a nation showered upon him without stint, the curtain of death drops upon the most illustrious man ever born of woman.
